Long Beach, CA 90802

June 3, 2019

Single IRB Review: Lessons from the Real World is a scenario-based workshop covering the challenges and opportunities related to research participant protections in the era of Single IRB review. The workshop will leverage real-world experiences to highlight the important ethical considerations for any organization involved in a reliant IRB review process. The workshop will address both the relying organization and reviewing IRB perspectives, and highlight strategies for addressing the inherent challenges of protecting human subjects within a single IRB review process.

Learning Objectives:

- Review the roles and responsibilities of organizations and IRBs in protecting human subjects in research.
- Identify key challenges in human subjects protections when the IRB role is placed outside of the organization.
- Discuss real-world solutions to maintain the ethical conduct of research and appropriate protections for human subjects using a single IRB model of review.
- Identify initiatives and strategies to translate ethical oversight and protections into day-to-day operations of both relying organizations and reviewing IRBs.
